Busglary in Fourth-street—Desperate Leap of the Burgler and his Subsequent Ar-rest.—On Sunday morning, about half-past two o'clock, E. A. Eighteenth Exhibition of the Ohio Mcchanics' Institute.

The interest in the Mechanics' Fair continues unabated, and the receipts are large, New articles are being entered daily, and the intrinsic merits of the stock on exhibit the intrinsic merits of the stock on exhibition is so great that the demands of the pubtic will hardly be satisfied, unless the managers conclude to continue the Fair longer than the original time proposed. Among the many objects of interest, we have space to mention but one or two at present.

We notice that our friends, Hall, Carroll & Co., not satisfied with the laurels which they have already mathered, both at home a co, not satisfied with the satisfies which they have already gathered, both at home and abroad, have again presented themselves as candidates for the approval of the business men of the West, and have placed in the main hall that beautiful safe which attracted so much attention at the United States Fair, proudly bearing the blue ribbon then bestowed upon it. Again they are un-lucky in having only Cincinnati mechanics to contend with. Neither here nor at the United States Fair

Neither here nor at the United States Fair did we notice a single safe of Eastern manufacture, when formerly the competition was great. Why is this? Where are Hatch, Gordon, Lillie and a host of others? Are they all too busy to attend, or do they tacitly yield the palm to Cincinnati, and decline to compete with her skillful and tasteful mechanics, for our workmen are both taste. chanies; for our workmen are both taste-ful and skillful. These safes are not the only articles in this exhibition that testify. Per-haps a short description of Messrs. H. & Co.'s display will illustrate this better than any display will illustrate this better than any thing else.

Of course, the chief requisites of a safe are security of its contents against the danger of fire and robbers. Convenience and elegance are desirable, in addition to these when the first two points are attained. In attaining the first of these essentials Messrs. Hall & Carroll have made use of some means which we have not noticed on any other which we have not noticed on any other safe. In the first place, the lining, instead of

In the first place, the lining, instead of being wood, as is usually the case, is made of boiler-plate like the outer case, thus giving a double thickness of iron, and the filling is a material which becomes as hard as the hardest lime-rock, making it almost impossible to cut it through under any circumstances. This filling, moreover, always remains dry, thus preventing the dampness and tendency to mold, which has frequently been an objection to fire-proof safes. But the chief interest is in the lock, or rather locks, by which the doors are secured. Across the outer door extends a bar of iron, sink into the surface of the door itself, and fastened by a combination lock, which would fastened by a combination lock, which would be considered sufficiently safe for any ordi-nary money-box. But this is only the beginning. Underneath this bar lies concealed the key-hole of one of the famous English the key-hole of one of the minous English Bramsh-locks, securing a pair of doors about three inches in thickness, made of solid steel plates. These being opened, disclose, not the interior of the safe, but another pair of doors of equal strength, so deeply set within the walls of the safe as to preclude any attempt to pry them off or burst them open, and fastened by one of Hall's Patent Tumbler-locks.

Tumbler-locks.

Most persons would think this would be secure enough for any purpose, but such is not the opinion of Messrs. Hall & Carroll. On opening these second doors, we find, deep within the inmost recess of the vault, a little chamber, designed to receive the very precious things of the owner, and defended by another pair of steel-plate doors, secured by the latest triumph of mechanism in this line, Hall's improvement on the famous Lord lock.

What will be thought of a lock positively without key or keyhole, having no communication with the outside of the door, and operated by an ordinary knob and a simple wrench, capable of some 10,000,000 combi-nations, the bolts being shot to cither one of which, it can only be opened by the one who closed it, or according to his directions; the very maker of the lock, even with the key, or rather wrench, in his possession, having no more chance of opening it when locked by another person, than the merest stranger. Yet such a lock may be seen in even to be appreciated, and we advise all who visit the Fair to stop and examine them,

A NEW PLANING-MACHINE.

In the machine department we noticed a new planer which bids fair to become of immense service to all those engaged in wood-working. It is nothing less than a combination, in one apparatus, of two machines heretofore used for quite different purposes, viz. the "Woodworth" and the "Daniels" Planers, with some additional improvements, which neither of those machines embrace. This valuable improvement is the invention of Mr. H. D. Stover, of New York City, who is already favorably known to many of our mechanics and manufacturers, as the patentee of the favorite "Eagle Molding Machine," and some other useful inventions.

Molding Machine," and some other useful inventions.

Heretofore it has been necessary in all large establishments to have two different planers—one for smoothing large staff and. The Stover Machine, by an ingenious arrangement, combines the traveling-table and dogs of the Daniels Planer, with the horizontal cutting-cylinder and endless feedrolls of the Woodworth, thereby enabling it to do the work of either as may be desired; and, in fact, giving two machines for the price of one. The value of this arrangement will be readily perceived by every one at all acquainted with wood-working machinery. But this is not all: By a peculiar arrangement—which would require more space than ment—which would require more space than we can spare to explain, but which is readily understood when seen—Mr. Stover dispenses with much of the complicated gearing commenly used to drive the feed-rollers, so much so, indeed, that he makes three wheels ac-complish the work usually requiring eight. But a more important improvement than planing out of wind, the other for surfacing boards and small lumber, and this frequently where the business was not sufficient to keep either machine employed more than half of the time. half of the time, this even, is in the peculiar arrangement of the cutting-kniver, by which they are given a shearing or drawing cut, enabling them to make smoother work, and do it with a much less expense of power than is usually required. The importance of this feature every mechanic can estimate. We shall speak of this machine and some others exhibited by the same parties, more at exhibited by the same parties, more at length at another time.

Attempted Soleide of a Young and Lovely 155t — A Betrothed Bride Swallows Poison.

Last Sunday evening, about nine o'clock, a young and lovely girl, residing in Courtstreet, near Walnut, while sitting in her parlor conversing with some acquaintances, suddenly fell from the chair to the floor, and became, apparently in a moment, unconscious. After the company had recovered from its surprise, the delicate form of the gentle creature who, but a short time before, had been the soul of their society, was carried to a couch and a physician called to her ried to a couch and a physician called to her assistance. In the meantime the news spread to the neighborhood, and her friends became aware of the fact that she had procured, early in the evening, a quantity of laudanum, amounting to nearly two ounces, and they began to fear that she had attempted suicide. Upon searching the room, a vial which had contained the deadly narcotic was found, and their suspicions were con-firmed.

The physician found his patient suffering from every symptom that follows the ad-ministration of this much-too-popular poison, and by the aid of the most presaic of all medical instruments—a stomach-pump, succeeded in relieving her system of the noxious tincture, and finally restored her to noxious tincture, and finally restored her to a partial consciousness.

Since then she has been growing grad-ually better, and is now considered out of danger. In the mean time she has revealed the fact that previous to taking the poison she had an interview with her lover, to whom she is betrothed, and that they had not only parted in anger but he had said he would never see her again.

would never see her again.

As soon as he had departed she procured the laudanum at a neighboring drug-store, the hudanum at a neighboring drug-store, and, after taking it, sat down to entertain her company, expecting that the quantity was large enough to produce the desired effect, whether she was discovered or not. What followed has been already related, save the mental as well as physical agony she must have suffered, which may be more readily imagined than described.
